Aaaaaaa Numb. 3783.

The Daily Courant.

Friday, November 27. 1713.

From the Paris Gazette, dated Nov. 25.

Naples, October 24.

THE Troops which were ſent to Benevento, under Pretext of ſearching for ſome Priſoners of State, are come back without having found them. And Count Daun has declared that he gave no ſuch Orders, and diſowns their Actions at Benevento. 'Tis even ſaid, that the Officers who commanded that Detachment, are to be impriſoned, to ſhew that the Viceroy had no Concern in what they did, ſo to prevent the Complaints made by the Pope, by giving him this ſlight Satisfaction beforehand. Great Diligence is uſed to carreen the Gallies, that they may be fit to put to Sea to tranſport the Spaniſh Regiments which were here, and which are ordered to Hungary. At the ſame time ſeveral Tartans and Tranſports are got together, on which they are to be imbarked in four Days, to be conducted firſt to Manfredonia, where they will find others to tranſport them to the Coaſts under the Obedience of the Houſe of Auſtria. The Galleys are to ſerve afterwards to change the Garriſons on the Coaſt of Tuſcany, and the Spaniards which are in thoſe Places, are to be drawn out to be imbarked as the reſt and carried to Hungary. The Deputation of Barcelona have written a Letter to this City, deſiring freſh Supplies, thoſe who ſtand in Rebellion having declared they were reſolved to defend themſelves to Extremity. But the Elect of the People has anſwered, that after ſo many Expences and ſo many publick Wants which ſtill continue, the Neapolitans cannot make new Efforts in their Favour. It had been propoſed to oblige private Perſons to provide themſelves with Meal and Oyl for a Year, and that the Magiſtrates ſhould lay in Stores of Corn into the publick Granaries for the like time. But the Magiſtrates have repreſented, that the City is not in a Condition to be at ſo great an Expence, the rather becauſe large Sums are due to them for Ammunition-Bread furniſhed long ago to the Troops, and which they cannot hope to be ſoon reimburſed; as alſo becauſe the buying up the Stores required would ſtill increaſe the Price of Corn and Oyl, at a time when there is Ground to fear a Scarcity, becauſe of the Mortality among the labouring Cattle; ſo the foreſaid Propoſition came to nothing. We have Advice, that on the Coaſts of Vico and Sorriento there has been a very violent Hurricane, which blew down many Houſes, and the Top of the Cathedral Church, whereby ſome Perſons were killed; and that it tore up by the Roots all the Trees on a large Extent of Country, principally the Olive-Trees.

Rome, Oct. 28. Nothing is yet done upon the Affair of Benevento, more than that on the Informations taken on the Place and ſent hither, an ample verbal Proceſs is drawn up of the Violences exerciſed by the German Dragoons, in the Town and in the Archiepiſcopal Palace. A Courier arrived t'other Day from Naples, but we learn nothing by him about this Affair, more than that the Viceroy blames it very much, declaring that he had not ordered any thing like what was done, and that he would puniſh the Officers who were culpable.

Venice, Nov. 4. The continual Rains have made the Rivers overflow in divers Places. The Sea having ſwelled after a Wind that blew one way for ſeveral Days, has overflowed great Part of this City, and ſpoiled abundance of Wells. The 28th of laſt Month a violent Tempeſt roſe, which did conſiderable Damage to the Ships that were at Anchor in our Ports: And among the reſt the St. Nicholas, one of thoſe Men of War which are to carry Signior Memmo Baily of the Republick to Conſtantinople, was ſo ſhattered, that 'tis not able to make the Voyage; ſo he is to embark on the St. Colombe.

From the Antwerp Courant, dated Dec. 1.
